This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION.

THE ſubſtance of the following pages, was ſent to a perſon who had conſulted the writer, about ſending a ſon to the Univerſity. The alteration which has been made, is the omiſſion of what applied only to the individual for whom the advice was aſked. The Liſt is added, as likely to afford ſome amuſement to Cambridge men, who may wiſh to refer to their old acquaintances; and alſo as a document, which (in the writer's opinion, and, as he hopes, in the opinion of others) will be ſufficient to prove to Oxonians moſt of the aſſertions which are advanced; and that in a more ſatisfactory manner than long deductions and arguments unſupported by facts. The writer has apprehenſions, from the publication of this letter, not indeed of Oxford indignation, but of the contempt of Alma Mater, for the hardineſs with which he has briefly attempted her apology, and the feebleneſs with which he has executed it.

In the firſt column, after the names, are added the three firſt letters of the name of the College to which the perſon belonged. The figures and letters J. S. W. in the ſecond column, ſhew what place was obtained among the Junior Optimees, Senior Optimees, or Wranglers; and in the third column is given the year in which each perſon took his degree of A. B.

The (S.) added to a name ſhews the perſon to have gained Smith's Prize, and the figures (1 or 2,) after it, whether the firſt or ſecond of thoſe annual prizes.

The (M.) denotes the Chancellor's Medal to have been gained, and the figures (1 or 2,) mean the firſt or ſecond.

The (B.'s) are marks of the Batchelor's Prizes, given by the Members for the Univerſity.

The (m.) is the mark of Browne's Medal.

The (N.) denotes the Norriſian Prize.

(H.) denotes the Hulſean Prize.

(C.) denotes the Craven Scholarſhips, the moſt honourable claſſical diſtinctions in the Univerſity.

The aſteriſk (*) marks preſent or former Fellows.

The word Seaton is added to the Seatonian Prizemen.

By the word degree, is meant the degree of A. B.

The writer has to apologiſe to the Author of the Cambridge Calendars, for the uſe he has made of thoſe intereſting publications; but as many references in the following letter, cannot be underſtood without a Cambridge Calendar, he hopes, that if this trifle has any influence, it will be that of extending the ſale of the Calendars, rather than of contracting it.

A LETTER, &c.

DEAR B——,

IN anſwer to your letter requeſting my opinion of the two Univerſities, I tell you, without any heſitation, that I give the moſt decided preference to Cambridge. It has every advantage over Oxford, except that it is more remote; and if you conceive the diſtance to be ſufficient to prevent your ſon from Term-trotting backwards and forwards at Chriſtmas and Eaſter, it will be no diſadvantage either to your pocket or his ſtudies. Let me add, that it is much more unuſual at Cambridge for Under-Graduates to leave College for the ſhort vacations, than at Oxford. Indeed, no one at Cambridge who had any intention of getting high on the Tripos, would leave College during the two years previous to his degree, except for the long vacation. Many remain during the long vacation which immediately precedes their degree, to prepare for the Schools and the Senate-Houſe examinations. But it is ſcarce worth the diſcuſſion; and I have no objection to allow, that if every thing elſe were equal in the two Univerſities, the proximity of Oxford might determine you. But I aver, that in point of expence, in point of diſcipline, in the ſyſtem of ſtudy and lectures, in the encouragement from prizes propoſed, in the manner of examining and conferring degrees, and afterwards in impartiality in electing to fellowſhips, (in every college where the election reſts in the members of the college, unſhackled by local or other appropriations,) the Univerſity of Cambridge is infinitely to be preferred. To any one, who, like you, is intereſted in the queſtion of their reſpective merits, I would recommend the attentive peruſal of the Cambridge Calendars: the author of which has given ſo fair and ample an account of all that is done in that Univerſity, that little remains for me, but to direct your attention to ſome points laid down in them, and then draw the compariſon between Cambridge and her ſiſter. If doing this be odious, the odium ought not to reſt with me, nor with the author of the Calendars, who, in the firſt which he publiſhed, gave a very modeſt invitation to the Univerſity of Oxford, to publiſh as candid an account of her polity, regulations, exerciſes, &c. as was given in the Cambridge Calendar: and I cannot account for the Univerſity of Oxford having ſo long neglected to do it, but for two reaſons; the one is, that the author of the Cambridge Calendars gives an intimation that Oxford had of late borrowed ſomething from Cambridge; and ſo the pride of the larger Univerſity is hurt; or elſe the whole ſyſtem of Oxford is ſo very inferior, that if ſhe were to publiſh it, ſhe might be almoſt conſidered as a felo de se. But even in that part of the Cambridge ſyſtem which the author of the Cambridge Calendar alludes to, as having been adopted at Oxford, in the examination of the candidates for the degree of Batchelor of Arts, four very eſſential particulars are neglected: the firſt is, as far as I underſtand the matter, (and here I lament my ignorance, which is by no means wilful, but merely through the want of ſuch a book as the Cambridge Calendar, to which I might apply,) that at Oxford, the candidates for the degree of A. B. chooſe what books they please for their own examinations; thereby permitting the candidates to direct the ſtudies of the Univerſity, inſtead of the Univerſity directing the ſtudies of the candidates. The ſecond particular in which they are deficient, is in not compelling all the candidates for this degree to be examined together; as by examining one in January, another in April, another in June, all opportunity of aſcertaining the relative merits of the candidates is completely loſt. The third point defective, is the not ſuppoſing every candidate for a degree to be a candidate for an honourable one; and trying him in the same books and questions, as if he were ever so anxious for an honour; in order to aſcertain exactly how idle and deficient he is, as well as how deſerving and induſtrious. And the laſt point, which is in fact the conſequence and reſult of the other three, is the not hanging up publickly the names of all who take their degrees, from the highest to the lowest, as is done at Cambridge, and greatly encourages the aſſiduity of the induſtrious, diſgracing, at the ſame time, lazineſs, ſtupidity, and irregularity. But while candidates carry up Greek and Latin books of different degrees of difficulty, from Æſop's Fables, (as far as we know,) to Thucidydes, Æſchylus, and Lycophron, at different times; and no account is publiſhed of the figure they make in books of their own chooſing, without any ſcale of their comparative merits, I think Oxford need not be afraid of the imputation of having borrowed much from Cambridge.

The honours at Oxford are, I believe given for proficiency in Latin and Greek, in which the Univerſity of Cambridge expects a greater proficiency at admiſſion, than has even lately been accepted (as Oxford men have told me) as ſufficient for a degree. The term A. B. certainly implies ſomething different from Latin and Greek. But if a lad at all reſemble one whom Quintilian would chooſe for a pupil, one, (as he expreſſes it,) qui victus fleat; I aſk if there can be conceived a greater corrective of his idleneſs, or incentive to induſtry, than that impreſſion which the proſpect of being publickly poſted at his degree, either as a dunce, or a ſcholar, muſt continually make upon him from the day of his admiſſion, till he has paſſed his examination in the Senate-Houſe?

For my own part, I believe nothing is more regretted by Cambridge men in general, than their utter ignorance of every thing like a system of education in the other Univerſity; till Oxford then chooſes to publiſh ſomething of the nature of the Cambridge Calendars, to enable perſons to judge between the two Univerſities, I ſhall make the compariſon from the beſt information I poſſeſs; and to convince you, that I do not write, (as Dr. Johnſon ſometimes confeſſed he uſed to talk,) merely for victory, and not his real ſentiments, it is my intention to reviſe and publiſh this letter, in the hope, that if I am miſtaken, ſome well-informed Oxonian, will publickly undeceive me, and others, who at preſent entertain the ſame opinions.

Firſt, then, as to the expence of the two Univerſities. That this has increaſed, is increaſing, and ought to be diminiſhed, I believe to be the general opinion of all parents and guardians, who either now have, or have had, the bills of under-graduates to pay in either Univerſity. But I believe the evil to be leſs at Cambridge than at Oxford, and to this opinion I have already converted ſome of my Oxford acquaintances, for there are many more Oxford than Cambridge men in this neighbourhood; and they ſeem to think, that the Cambridge plan of ſubjecting the under-graduate's bills to the controul of the tutor, or, to ſpeak more properly, the permitting them to have only what the tutors allow, muſt be a wiſe regulation. It may not be generally known, that at Cambridge it is the tutor's name, and not the under-graduate's, in which the bills on under-graduates are made out by the tradeſmen. That many break through the regulated allowance, and that there are ſome expences, ſuch for inſtance, as wine, horſe-hire, and the like, which are not under controul, I admit; but that, upon the whole, the tutor's controul over the statutable expences has an excellent effect, I affirm, if it be only from ſubjecting tradeſmen's bills on under-graduates to older eyes and more conſiderate heads than they generally meet at Oxford, and ſubmitting every extravagant young man to the quarterly reprimand of his tutor. Now, of all men that I know, I ſhould feel moſt delighted to convert on this article of expence, the D— of C—— C——, who tells country clergymen who bring their ſons as commoners to Oxford, not to bring them to Chriſt-Church, unleſs they will allow them three hundred pounds per annum; and for the truth of this, I appeal to the A——— of B——, who was a commoner of C—— C——, and whoſe father told me that the D— held this language to him, in preſence of his ſon, twelve or fifteen years ago, when he took him for admiſſion. Now the D— is ſuppoſed to be an excellent claſſical ſcholar, and he does appear to throw a new light on a paſſage in Horace, of which men in the fens, craſſoque ſub aëre, would have had no idea.

" Ego, (quoth the D—,) nec ſtudium ſine divite venâ,
" Nec rude quid proſit video ingenium; alterius ſic
" Altera poſcit opem res et conjurat amicè."

Divite venâ, a gold-mine, a ſilver mine, a lead-mine, (which is ſometimes as profitable almoſt as the others.) if one of theſe does not produce three hundred pounds per ann. for the lad, studium nil prodest—at leaſt within the walls of C—— C——. Beſides, I believe Horace was not ſo fond of gentlemen commoners as the D—, for he ſays, — " Eutrapelus cuicunque nocere volebat,

" Veſtimenta dabat pretiosa."

But whether he really meant gentlemen commoners' gowns at Oxford, or fellow commoners' at Cambridge, I leave to be determined by the tutors in both Univerſities, who have experience to aid their claſſical acumen, in deciding on the paſſage, after having told them of a gentleman commoner, an only ſon, who was ſent to C—— C——, certainly in the D—'s ſenſe, cum divite venâ, and who, after having reſided eight months without keeping a horſe, without being more than ordinarily addicted to any faſhionable vice, had got rid of upwards of ſixteen hundred pounds, and was taken away by his father without having had a reprimand (I believe) either from the D— or the tutor, on the ſcore of expence. Whether the D—'s promoting ſo great an ordinary expence for a commoner as is here ſtated, or his ſuffering ſuch an extraordinary expence as I have cited in the caſe of the gentleman commoner, be praiſe-worthy or not, the D— has, and deſerves to have, the credit or the blame of it. Though ſome wags have called him the maſter of the Weſtminſter Poor-Houſe, he is, I believe, and looks on himſelf to be, the dictator of Oxford; and when the little colleges imitate the expence of the great one,

"Suaviter arridens non ſi te ruperis, inquit,
"Par eris."

The ſpending a great deal of money, is the way in which the tutors at Cambridge ſuppoſe what is meant by a wrangler at Oxford, is made; but it is not the mode to make what is meant at Cambridge by that term. No, no. Multa tulit fecitque puer, sudavit et alsit. I am perfectly convinced that there is not a head or a tutor at Cambridge, who would not tell a parent, that three hundred pounds per annum is much more than is neceſſary, more than is proper, for a penſioner who is really to ſtudy ſo as to get ſuch a Senate-Houſe honour, as may entitle him to a fellowſhip. And ſo much for the expence. I proceed to the ſyſtem of diſcipline and ſtudy, which has been laid down ſo clearly and fully in the Cambridge Calendars, that to them I refer you for the information, and ſhall add a few obſervations on the propriety of them. And here I cannot paſs over the common-place cry againſt the Univerſity of Cambridge, for being too much addicted to, and laying too great a ſtreſs on, mathematical ſtudies. The defence of mathematical ſtudies has been undertaken with great ſucceſs by one, whom the Univerſity of Oxford will certainly allow not to have had his abilities hurt by being too much addicted to them, as he was, perhaps, the moſt brilliant ſtar that ſhone in the conſtellation of wits at the beginning of the laſt century. And to Dr. Arbuthnot's work in defence of Mathematical Studies in general, I refer you; while I tell you that the accuſation of Cambridge men having too much mathematical learning, appears to me like the accuſation of a ſavage to a civilized man, who ſays to him, "You have too great a quantity of clothing about you: why don't you go naked as I do, and free yourſelf from that fooliſh incumbrance which obſtructs your motions and obſcures the beauty of your perſon?" The wearer of the clothes, and the perſon ſkilled in mathematics, are the beſt judges whether the clothes or the mathematics are incumbrances or not; and if once a man has proceeded ſo far, as to get himſelf an algebra ſhirt, and an Euclid pair of ſmall-clothes, he may not find himſelf comfortable till he has got a full ſuit of natural philoſophy, and wrapped himſelf up in a Newtonian great-coat. That the Univerſity of Oxford has not publiſhed a ſimilar account of her ſtudies to that given of the other Univerſity in the Cambridge Calendar, may perhaps principally be imputed to her not being able to inſert any account of the ſtudy of mathematics or natural philoſophy in her ſyſtem. Not having theſe to inſert, and having nothing elſe that would paſs current with the world to ſubſtitute in their ſtead, they keep their ſyſtem to themſelves; vainly hoping, that as far as regards them, omne ignotum erit pro magnifico. That they are not likely to become great proficients in mathematics or natural philoſophy, I think may be preſumed, when I tell you, that a young man of my acquaintance, an A. B. at Oxford, wiſhing to know ſomething of theſe matters, lately applied to the only perſon there, whoſe province it is to read lectures in natural philoſophy, ſaying that he and ſome more young men were deſirous of attending a courſe of lectures, when the perſon excuſed himſelf on account of his age and infirmities from giving them. Now there is not any college in Cambridge, where lectures in mechanics, optics, hydroſtatics, and aſtronomy, are no regularly read by the tutors, not to mention Profeſſor Vince's lectures, which are not to be equalled in any univerſity in the world. But as to the higher mathematics, as well might the French navy expect to exhibit in three or four years a ſet of as able admirals and navy-captains, as now appear in Steel's Liſt, as that Oxford could in as ſhort a time make herſelf a ſet of mathematicians; it requiring at leaſt as long a ſeries of years to form a ſchool of mathematicians, as it does of naval officers. And if it be ſaid by the preſent members of the Univerſity of Oxford, we cannot help what is paſt, but we will immediately ſet ourſelves to amend the deficiency in future, they are entitled to praiſe for their candour, and for their good intentions in future, but have certainly no claim to preſent merit, which I am diſcuſſing. I believe their ignorance on theſe points to be ſo great, ſo much greater than they themſelves are aware of, that I have extracted from the Cambridge Calendar, one or two ſhort problems,* not with the leaſt expectations of Oxford mathematicians being able to ſolve them, but merely for them to try if they can read them; that is, whether they can underſtand the terms and characters in which they are given. And it will be obſerved, that theſe are not queſtions formed on purpoſe to poſe an Oxford man, but are taken from thoſe which have been given in the Senate-Houſe, to the candidates for the degree of A. B. with an expectation of their being ſolved; and that this expectation has been anſwered by many of laſt year's batchelors, to whom they were given. I take ſome of the ſhorteſt.

Now when the gentlemen in that Univerſity have tried theſe hieroglyphics, I ſhall be much ſurprized if one in twenty can read them. When therefore we are told as I have been by the head of a houſe in Oxford, that the examinations there are ſo ſtrict as to terrify ſome candidates, ſo that they fly from thence to Cambridge in order to eſcape their fiery trial,—Risum teneatis amici?

Well then, ſays an Oxonian, we allow the Cambridge men to be better mathematicians and better natural philoſophers, (for I do not believe there is any one ever ſo partial that will deny it.) Some ſuperiority then on the ſcore of general knowledge is here conceded; but ſay they, we exceed you in claſſical knowledge, in logic, metaphyſics, languages, &c.

On the point of claſſical knowledge, I am perfectly ready to meet the Oxonians, and declare, in the firſt place, that probability is againſt them, and that the ſuperiority of Cambridge is rather eſtabliſhed than contradicted by experience. Indeed, I only aſſume that the habit of induſtry neceſſary for mathematical ſtudies, will have generally a beneficial effect when applied to other ſtudies, among which claſſical literature has as fair a chance of being benefited as any other. And next I aſſert that the encouragement given to claſſical literature from prizes is much greater at Cambridge than at Oxford; and for the truth of this I appeal to the annexed liſt, from which it will appear, that in the fifty-four years which it comprehends, upwards of three hundred claſſical prizes have been gained by thoſe who have obtained mathematical honours, beſides thoſe which have been gained by perſons whoſe names do not appear in the Tripoſes; eſpecially by the whole body of King's men, which are very many: a body which the Univerſity of Cambridge, when trying her claſſical proweſs might place with advantage in her very foremoſt rank; yet when comparing her ſtrength with that of her ſiſter Univerſity, I ſee no reaſon why ſhe ſhould dread the iſſue of the conteſt, if the King's men ſtand by as quiet inactive ſpectators, not to be called in till ſhe finds herſelf unable to ſtand without them.

" Let you and I the battle try,
" And ſet these men aſide."

Opportunities are afforded by Browne's Medals, and writing verſes for the Tripoſes, of bringing under-graduates very early into repute as claſſical ſcholars; and from greater encouragement being given by a greater number of prizes at Cambridge than at Oxford, for claſſical learning, the probability is, that the uſual cauſe produces the uſual effect, and that where there is moſt encouragement given to a commodity, there will the ſhe moſt of that commodity be brought to market. It is not my intention to ſay much of the comparative merit of individuals in the two Univerſities, but merely to ſtate a ſort of negative proof that Oxford has no right from living members, who have belonged or do now belong to her, to aſſume as a fact that ſhe excels the Univerſity of Cambridge in claſſical literature. In mentioning the two profeſſors Marſh and Porſon, we do not ſhrink from compariſon; and without naming other names, we muſt notice that uſeful body of excellent ſcholars, who will be found in the list as ſchoolmaſters at many of the greateſt ſchools in England; nor can we help feeling a ſort of triumph, when we look over the list, and ſee that when a new eſtabliſhment of great national importance is to be formed at Hertford, the profeſſors are not fetched from the undefined ſcholars of Oxford, but from the mathematicians and claſſics of Cambridge. I relate two anecdotes which have come within my own knowledge, which certainly bear no teſtimony to the ſuperiority of Oxford claſſical learning to that of Cambridge; though it may ſurprize many to be told, that when the Univerſity of Oxford has a mind to preſent the world with a ſplendid edition of ſome claſſic author from its magnificent preſs, inſtead of employing ſome eminent reſident member to correct the preſs, in order to appear before Europe with eclat, they find it more convenient to ſend ſuch an author as Strabo ſheet by ſheet from Oxford to Bath. And here we muſt commend the Univerſity of Oxford for getting ſo able an editor for their work; for as it is true that qui facit per alium, facit per se, ſo alſo it is as true that quæ ipse bene facere non sapit; a sapientiori fieri debent. The other anecdote which I would mention, and which I vouch for the truth of from my own knowledge, is, that after having ſent all over the world for copies of the Septuagint, inſtead of employing any residents to continue Dean Holme's Collations, they ſend ſixty miles for a country clergyman, who had long been married, and left Oxford for nearly twenty years; and give him, (as I hope,) a handſome ſtipend, with coals, candles, and houſe-rent; and as he was reſident on his living, if any qui-tam ſhould come acroſs him, mean alſo, I ſuppoſe, to pay the expences and penalties of the ſuit. And here again this Univerſity, fungens vice cotis, deſerves ſome credit; and I am ſatisfied, that as they muſt go abroad for workmen, they have done well in fixing on Mr. F——, and Mr. P——; though Profeſſor Porſon publiſhed his Æſchylus without ſending to Bath for the one, and Marſh his Michaelis without ſending to Newnham for the other. The publication of Strabo, and the continuing the aſſociate pretty generally with each other; and even the fellow-commoners are, on ſome points, brought down to the level of penſioners, wearing ſurplices in chapel, taking their turns in declaiming with the other under-graduates, and aſſociating as much with them as with each other. I do not think that colleges founded as Chriſt-Church, Corpus, and Magdalen, are to be the moſt eligible foundations, becauſe the electing a lad of ſeventeen or eighteen into an almoſt certain fellowſhip, deſtroys in a great degree that ſtimulus to induſtry, which operates, or ought to operate, in colleges otherwiſe founded, from the day of admiſſion to the time of their degree. This diſadvantage is conſiderably increaſed at Magdalen and Corpus, by the admitting no independent members except gentlemen commoners, between whom and the demys and ſcholars an almoſt inſurmountable bar is placed. This is unknown at Cambridge, except at King's, and even there the ſeparation is leſſened by the fellow-commoners and ſcholars having been ſchool-fellows together; beſides, the whole œconomy of King's College is ſo different from the reſt of the Univerſity, that it may be conſidered as an Univerſity in itſelf, as much as a part of the Univerſity of Cambridge. I am one of thoſe who think that the ſons of the rich and great reap benefit at public ſchools from being placed on a level with their inferiors in life, which benefit is immediately done away, if on going to college a barrier is erected inſtantly between the gentleman-commoner and the commoner. The conſtitution of Cambridge Univerſity is by the author of the Calendars called a republic, and in the matriculation oath; and its conſtitution does not appear ſo abſolute a government as that of Oxford, where the Vice-Chancellor is appointed by the Chancellor, and not elected, as at Cambridge, by the Senate.

I come now to ſpeak of the impartiality with which fellowſhips in the ſeveral colleges are given as rewards for the induſtry of the candidates; and this alone, in my mind, is ſufficient to ſtamp the ſuperiority of the Univerſity of Cambridge; and for the proof of which I was principally induced to ſubjoin the liſt, to ſhew to the world that the Univerſity does not beſtow empty honour for idle purpoſes, but that all the colleges conſpire to give ſubſtantial effect to that encouragement to induſtry, which the Tripoſes hold out. I aſſert then that the rule of not electing fellows, except from thoſe who obtain honours in the Senate-Houſe, is ſtrictly abided by; and that every perſon who goes to Cambridge, may be ſaid to be ſo far ſuæ fortunæ artifex, that he may have a fellowſhip if he pleaſes. He may indeed want ſome legal or ſtatutable qualification, that is, he may have been notoriouſly irregular in his conduct and expences; he may have ſuch a real property as diſqualifies him; he may not be of the eſtabliſhed church, &c. The members of King's College are not examined in the Senate-Houſe. At Trinity-Hall, they are all (except the tutors,) civilians. At Caius, there are ſome medical fellowſhips, and ſome bye fellowſhips are ſo appropriated by the founders, that no diſcredit attaches to the Univerſity or the College from a deviation from the general rule, in electing into theſe fellowſhips. Though many of theſe appropriations are gotten rid of ſo far, as that even thoſe elected from Weſtminſter ſchool to Trinity College find that without ſufficient induſtry to obtain an honour, they have little preference ſhewn them to other candidates; and the conſequence has been that they have not (as appears from the liſt) elected a ſingle fellow for the laſt twenty years, who was not in the firſt Tripos; and of the ſixty fellows of that college whoſe names were publiſhed in the Cambridge Calendar of 1807, forty-two of them were wranglers. And, excepting in bye or appropriated fellowſhips, not one fellow in twenty can be found, who did not get an honour or a prize. Excepting in bye or appropriated fellowſhips, there are not inſtances enough to the contrary, to prevent a general aſſertion, that without obtaining an univerſity honour or a prize, no one is elected into a fellowſhip at Cambridge. There is too not only an encouragement to induſtry, but alſo a ſecurity of ſucceſs; for when the colleges ſend their candidates for degrees into the Senate-Houſe, and the Univerſity confers on them an honour, they are, in fact, ſtamped as current; and the colleges cannot well refuſe their honours in exchange for fellowſhips, whenever vacancies happen. On what a different footing then does a man come into a ſociety at Cambridge, from that on which he is elected at Oxford? Ye bene nati; ye bene vestiti; ye fellows of A— S—, O——, and M——; how many of you can lay your hands on your hearts, and be ſatisfied that you hold your fellowſhips from the learning you have obtained ſince you became members of the Univerſity, or exhibited at your examinations? In certain colleges, liſts are made out, (which I have ſeen,) pointing out through what great man each fellow may be attacked for his vote; theſe liſts are given to the candidates' friends, that they may canvaſs night and day to obtain votes and intereſt previous to all examination. I myſelf have been employed in this buſineſs, and canvaſſed when an hundred miles off, to write after votes, without knowing any thing of the literary merits of the candidates. The number of honours alſo at Cambridge is very nicely adjuſted to the exigences of the Univerſity; that is, not only no fellows are elected who do not get honours, but in general all thoſe who do get honours, at leaſt who get into the firſt Tripos, get fellowſhips. I know ſeveral colleges, (and I refer to the liſt,) where this is the caſe; at Queen's, Jeſus, Clare-Hall, &c. In ſending a lad to Cambridge indeed with a view to a fellowſhip, regard muſt be had to ſend him to a college where he is not diſqualified for holding a fellowſhip by the college ſtatutes; for inſtance, where all the fellowſhips are limited to the natives of certain counties, a lad is not to be ſent there who is not a native of any of them; nor if he be deſigned to the bar, ſhould he be ſent to a college where all the fellows are required to go into orders; &c. &c.

I believe then that at the preſent hour, in almoſt every ſcience, in divinity, law, phyſic, oratory, poetry, moral and natural philoſophy, Cambridge has an equality, in many, a ſuperiority, over Oxford. I name no names, I refer to the liſt. At Oxford I have underſtood that ſtrings, juraments, walks in the pig-market, wall-lectures, chopping logic, and many other ingenious monkiſh inſtitutions are falling into decay, and almoſt exploded; and the moment I ſhall be informed of what has ſucceeded, I ſhall be glad to give in my recantation, (if the new inſtitutions are ſuperior to thoſe at Cambridge,) as ſoon as they have produced a viſible effect. If they alter and appropriate to themſelves any thing they take from us, we hope they will endeavour to improve it. When they have done this, do manus, and I would ſend my ſon to ſtand for a ſcholarſhip, provided he had firſt eſtabliſhed a high character at Eton, without any apprehenſion of his being beaten by the ſon of a former fellow four or five years younger; nor if he ſhould fail of a ſcholarſhip, would I refuſe an honourable compenſation for his rejection, handſomely made by thoſe who were convinced of his abilities. But at preſent the ſyſtem of electing fellows and ſcholars at Oriel, Merton, All-Soul's, Corpus, &c. does appear to me to be the immedicabile vulnus, enſe recidendum. In a party of

Oxford men, one was expreſſing his aſtoniſhment that a Cambridge man, I think, of the name of Rogers, ſhould take a houſe and pupils, and, I believe, give lectures, at Oxford; when a Cantab could not refrain from ſaying, "Good ſir, repreſs your aſtoniſhment, till an Oxford man takes a houſe and pupils, and gives lectures at Cambridge."

With regard to the two Univerſities, this I declare to be my creed; and leaſt I ſhould be thought blind and wholly partial, I ſubjoin an account of what appears to me to be the very worſt point in the whole ſyſtem of diſcipline in the Univerſity of Cambridge, without knowing whether the ſame regulations prevail at Oxford or not. I mean the diſpenſation ſubjoined to the matriculation oath; declaring, that whoever ſwears to obey the ſtatutes, and ſubmits, (if he do not obey them,) to the puniſhment enjoined, or that may be legally inflicted, ſhall not be guilty of perjury. Now though the perſons who take this enervated oath, may be looked upon as no more guilty of perjury than the fools who are ſworn at Highgate, I would aſk the Univerſity where ſhe got this diſpenſing power, which ſays that ſubmiſſion to puniſhment is, quoad the oath, the ſame as a ſtrict obedience? Who, in heaven or earth, has given authority to the Univerſity to adminiſter ſuch an oath? Whatever blame there is, attaches to the giver of ſuch an oath, much more than to the taker who only ſwears to conditions which he fulfils; whereas the other has no power to offer an oath on ſuch unauthoriſed conditions. The truth is, there is no occaſion for an oath at all. It would be ſufficient, if every under-graduate at matriculation made and ſubſcribed a declaration to the following effect:—I declare I am ready and willing to ſubmit to all the laws, cuſtoms, and ſtatutes of this Univerſity. The oath is uſeleſs, for if the ſtatutes are infringed, the delinquent is puniſhed, not for perjury, but for the breach of the ſtatutes, which would be the caſe if there were no oath at all; for he muſt ſtill ſuffer ſuch puniſhment as the Vice-Chancellor and the other legal authorities might inflict. If an oath of this ſort be not exacted at Oxford, (and I ſincerely hope it is not,) I ſhould exult exceedingly, if to ſhew an entire freedom from jealouſy, Cambridge would adopt the alteration, and prove at once her good ſenſe and her condeſcenſion; ſhewing, that whatever beneficial inſtitutions may be tranſplanted from her ſiſter Univerſity, ſhe will immediately adopt; and that in points where they differ, if Oxford will prove herſelf to the world to be in the right, ſhe will immediately acknowledge herſelf in the wrong, and ſet about amending the abuſe. But we bar all falſe logic and ſcholaſtic gibberiſh; Dario Baraliptons, &c. We muſt have ſubſtantial proof, an authenticated account like the Cambridge Calendar, and a document like the ſubjoined liſt, to which we may refer. Nor ſhall I condeſcend to reply to any one who may notice the remarks I have made, unleſs ſome documents be added, to which bold assertion may be referred for proof.

Since writing the above, I have obtained a copy of the grace and clause I refer to.

" Placeat vobis, ut majorem in posterum cautelam et levamen hæc verba sint annexa juramentis academiæ matriculationis, admissionis, creationis.

" Senatus Cantabrigiensis decrevit et declaravit eos omnes qui monitionibus correctionibus mulctis et pœnis statutorum, legum, decretorum, ordinationum, injunctionum et laudabilium consuetudinum hujus academiæ transgressoribus quovis modo incumbentibus humiliter se submiserint nec esse nec habendos esse perjurii reos."

After having sworn :—

" Cancellario procancellarioque academiæ Cantabrigiensis quatenus jus fasque est, et pro ordine, in quo fuerim quamdiu in hac repu' lica degam comiter obtemperabo; leges statuta, mores approbatos et privilegia Cantabrigiensis academiæ quantum in me est observabo, &c."
